Srisasanti Gallery is pleased to present Life from the Corner of My Room, a solo exhibition by RYOL. Marking RYOL's first solo exhibition with the gallery, Life from the Corner of My Room sets a return of his solo exhibition in Indonesia since 2020, featuring his latest body of works.

The exhibition signifies an ongoing artistic process that remains central to RYOL's practice. Much of his childhood was spent within the comfort and confines of his room. In its quiet enclosure, his attention gravitated toward spaces that resisted usefulness or visibility: the underside of tables, the space above cupboards, and the corners where rooms seemed to recede. These marginal zones gradually became places where his imagination took root and flourished. Drawing from this experience and spatial relationship, the exhibition's title reflects how imagination, in RYOL's practice, emerges from the liminal and the easily dismissed, where imagination takes hold not despite its insignificance, but because of it.

The works in this exhibition serve as accumulations of images inspired by pop culture—visual languages that shaped the artist's upbringing. RYOL introduces a recurring set of elliptical, geometric forms that resemble water droplets or capsules. Through these simplified shapes, he seeks to evoke sensation rather than representation, using abstraction to shift attention away from appearance and toward feeling. Form, in this context, becomes a vessel for lived and felt experience rather than a tool for visual description.

Life from the Corner of My Room invites viewers to reconsider the quiet intimacy of overlooked spaces and the subtle ways they shape perception and memory. RYOL traces how imagination can grow from the most unassuming corners of daily life. The exhibition becomes an open field where sensation, recollection, and play converge—suggesting that meaning often emerges from what is peripheral, fleeting, and gently held at the edge of attention.

Life from the Corner of My Room opens to the public from 15 February—5 April 2026. Exhibition hours are Tuesday—Sunday from 1 to 8 PM (WIB) at Tirtodipuran Link Building A, Yogyakarta.

Laksamana Ryo, also known as RYOL (b. 1993, Indonesia), is a Yogyakarta-based artist whose practice centers on visual art rooted in pop culture. Drawing from his childhood experiences as a grounding influence, RYOL's early engagement with the animated worlds of Sunday morning cartoons unconsciously nurtured his sense of freedom and visual sensibility in his practice.

RYOL's journey into pop culture has articulated his artistic vision within a long-term practice. Through this commitment, his work takes part in the artistic landscape, extending beyond profession into a lifelong pursuit.

Srisasanti Gallery is an art gallery founded by E. St. Eddy Prakoso with the main goal of initiating global appreciation for Indonesian artists.

Srisasanti Gallery represents and supports its artists with a long-term perspective, dedicating its effort to developing their careers and providing a significant audience for their works, both regionally and globally. The gallery has been exhibiting established artists who have important roles in Indonesian art history, while also nurturing emerging artists to contribute to the growth of the Indonesian art scene. Apart from presenting intensive and dynamic in-house programs each year, Srisasanti Gallery also actively presents its artists at art fairs and other international programs.
